When we want to know about the weather, we can listen to a weather report on the radio or watch the report on television. Scientists study the weather in weather stations and send the information around the world. They have special instruments that help them.

They use a ¹ thermometer to measure how hot or how cold it is.

They use a ² rain gauge to measure how much rain falls.

They use a ³ weather vane to show the direction of the wind.

Scientists can use this information to make weather maps and reports.
